

FAYETTEVILLE CITY SCHOOLS

Tricia Jean named supervisor with Fayetteville City Schools

Tricia Jean, a 20-year veteran educator, has been named Supervisor of Early Literacy with Fayetteville City Schools.

In her position, she will oversee virtual education, licensure, personnel, textbooks and RTI. Mrs. Jean succeeds Cindy Young, former FCS supervisor who accepted a position with the University of Tennessee Southern earlier this year.

Mrs. Jean currently serves as Fayetteville Middle School principal, a position she will continue to hold through the end of this school year.

“We’ve had a supervisor’s opening since February, and we are super excited to have Mrs. Jean join the team up here in the central office,” said Bill W. Hopkins, Jr., director of schools. “She will be a great asset in her new role.”

“It has been a privilege and honor to work with the exceptional students and dedicated staff at FMS,” said Mrs. Jean. “As the principal, I have enjoyed creating personal relationships with the students and loved seeing them grow, not only academically but also seeing them mature into young adults. I look forward to transitioning into the role of a supervisor where I can help facilitate the growth of not just FMS, but the entire FCS system.”

Mrs. Jean is no stranger to the Fayetteville City School System, attending school at Ralph Askins and then Fayetteville Junior High School. She has spent her entire career in education in the city system, serving for 20 years as a teacher and administrator.

She earned an associate’s degree from Motlow State Community College, a bachelor’s degree from Middle Tennessee State University, a master’s degree in administration and supervision from Tennessee State University and an educational specialist degree in curriculum and instruction from MTSU.

Tricia and her husband, Travis, both natives of Fayetteville, have two children, McKenlee and Ashlee.